As you read further, you can imagine that all the layers in a Photoshop document are made up of pixels. This fact explains the image's file size, and also why some of Photoshop's features can alter image size beyond your expectations. You can see in figure 1-19 that the more layers you have, the higher the file size. Figure 1-19. Q: Django: How to use a variable in 'with' I'm trying to fetch data from related models so I can use it to make a form. The form would be created within the constructor of the view. I'm getting an error: NoReverseMatch at /get_products/1/ The model Products is a django.db.models.base.Model and the error indicates that a queryset was not given to with() method. View def get_products(request, pk): products = get_object_or_404(Products, pk=pk) return render(request, 'products.html', {'product': products}) Template {% for a in product.category.categories %} {{ a.name }} {% endfor %} {% for b in product.category.categories %} {{ b.name }} {% endfor %} {% for c in product.category.categories %} {{ c.name }} {% endfor %} I have tried to use an 'if' statement in the template, but i was unsuccessful. Is there any way to use variables in the with() method? I have looked at this, this, and this, but nothing helped. I'm still a beginner. A: It's hard to say without the full context. It seems like your view is a bit short to be useful. Why not just be done in the view with something like {{ product.category_set.all()|map:product.id }} That won't return a ModelForm, but it'll give you a list of all related products in one big query. Or... for even better performance, do this: {{ product.category_set.all|dict:(pkid) }} And this will do the same thing... {{ product.category_set.all|dict:product.id }} We don't expect you to know everything there is to know about programming in C, but we do expect you to have a bit of basic programming knowledge to get by. This section is for people who've learned basic programming or who wish to start with something a little

Induction of human bone marrow fibroblasts to the level of class II antigens is a characteristic event of the activity of interferon-gamma (IFN-gamma). This induction is not only observed when bone marrow stromal cells are cultivated in contact with T cells but can also be shown when bone marrow stromal cells are cultivated in conditioned medium in which T cells are removed. To see if there is any correlation between induction of class II antigens and the induction of class I antigens by IFN-gamma, we compared both the time course of expression and the dose-response relationships. The upregulation of class II antigens was much slower than that of class I antigens, and differences in response to IFN-gamma were observed. Furthermore, we examined whether MHC class II antigens are specifically induced by IFN-gamma in bone marrow stromal cells. Bone marrow stromal cells constitutively express a low level of class II antigens in the absence of IFN-gamma. However, when they were cultured with IFN-gamma, the expression of class II antigens on the surface of these cells increased in a dose-dependent manner. The increase in class II antigen expression is specific, in that class I antigens did not increase. Although the
