Matches are built on a foundation of authentic, detailed gameplay. Unlike any other game, “the whole is greater than the sum of its parts,” said senior producer for FIFA, Nick Tayler. “It feels like you are competing and playing a real match, but in a virtual environment.” Full match realism includes dynamic physics and animations. The game’s engine uses robust physics to recreate the speed of the ball in midair, the power of impact when tackling, and the weight of a player’s shirt. The ball also feels different, responding to collisions and ricochets with a level of fidelity similar to the real-life ball. FIFA 22 also features a multitude of player properties, allowing players to be composed of distinct elements, each with unique qualities. These include different match conditions, phases, kits, teammates, and animations. Each player reacts to challenges in its own unique way, with players’ skills and abilities reflecting individual gameplay styles, all with a myriad of unique player traits. A football life cycle allows players to gain experience points as they play matches, building their attributes and gradually become more skilled. Players can also form a career mode called “FIFA Academy,” where players are given the chance to develop their talents in the World’s Next Top Team, a team stocked with the best young players from around the world. FIFA 22 introduces “Real Player Motion.” In addition to the movement/physics engine, the player models move with the right amount of weight and feel just like real players. FIFA 22 also introduces high-end match engine. Authentic conditions, such as weather, are recreated in unprecedented detail. The match engine is scalable to any number of players, allowing for more meaningful and complex matches, and features new ways of maximizing player engagement, like crowd animations, club brand effects and player animations. The audio design of the game allows the audience to hear the real life chants and songs of different leagues. FIFA World Cup officially kicks off with 64 matches on Aug. 2 (Brazil v. Croatia), with all of the 16 World Cup matches on 4K and HDR. FIFA franchise sales exceed 75 million units worldwide. FIFA titles have garnered more than one billion hours of gameplay on the PlayStation4, PS3 and PS Vita, and over 175 million hours on the Xbox One. FIFA mobile alone has
